of the pole.

It was at Battle Harbor that Commander Peary told the story to a score or more of correspondents of his journey. He will head no more trips to the Arctic, nor, for that matter, to the Antarctic. His work in the ice field is finished.

"I have accomplished the ambition of my life," said the commander, "I shall always be interested in Arctic exploration, but it must now be left to younger men."

Commander Peary often broke his narrative to call upon Prof. Donald Mc-Millan, naturalist and geologist, to relate some incident of the trip. No less interesting than Peary's dash to the pole were the discoveries of Prof. Mc-Millan of relics and stores of seven previous arctic expeditions of ble would supplement my work with previous arctic expeditions, those of bonor enough for two American ploration party of 1903; Sir John Woods' age at the pole." expedition: the exploration party of Admiral Sir George Nares in 1875-6, and the expeditions of Commander Peary in

Then he continued: "I do not care to speak of other observations in view of that claim, and won't say anything more until the statement signed by another is offered and then I will by another is offered and then I will submit my statement."

PEARY TELLS STORY OF CHRISTMAS IN ARCTICS.

Sydney, C. B., Sept. 19.-The story of Christmas day in the arctic was pictured today by Commander Peary. Athletic contests were arranged by Prof. McMillan and a running course of 75 yards on the ice and snow was laid out

Christmas day falls in the dead of the arctic night, and to light the racing path, little oil lamps were set on snow mounts. In the flickering yellow light this weird company, booded and garbed in the heavy furs of the north, gathered and applaused the contestants.

"Tun Cuh Mah won the race for the married women and Prof. McMillan had offered the selection of one of three things as the prize—a bar of soap, a box of thread and a frosted cake.

We were all curious to know which article Tuh Cuh Mah would select."

"We had Washington pudding and plum pudding and Capt. Bartlett opened a locked canister of good things which his wife quietly gave to me before weleft the south and told me to give it to ner husband on Christmas day. I found that Mrs. Feary had worked the captain the same way and had given him a locked canister for me to be opened on Christmas day. We had hot toddy and cigars for all. All the members of the party received a box of candy from Mrs. Peary."

Mrs. Peary.

Speaking of the scientific value of the expedition to the north pole. Commander Peary said that soundings from Cape Columbia to the pole were valuable and supplemented the data given Nansen and Cagni on the other side of the pole.

"The reaching of the pole," added Peary, "is proof of man's final conquest of the earth. As it stood, with the pole unfound it was a continual repreach to civilization. The discovery of the south pole may now be looked for as an accepted fact. Work in the antarctic is quite different than in the north. An expedition to the north pole must complete the work within the year. No base can be left for another year's operation while an antarctic explorer can lay a base which will be permanent for the future advance next year." That Greenland and the arctic regions will become a summer resort i time is Commander Peary's belief, an Dr. Goodsell, physician of the expedi-tion, asserted that the dry air and constant sunlight of the summer was a fine cure for tuberculosis.

The explorer spoke sadly of the loss of Ross Marvin, who was drowned on of Ross Marvin, who was drowned on April 11.

"We were in our ingloos," said he, "when Kood Look Too and Inuh Glua Too, whom Percy, the steward, had christened Harrigan, came into camp with their heads down. They shook their heads and we knew that poor Marvin had been lost. They said they found the hole where he had fallen through the thin ice, and that they could see the back of his fur coat above the surface of the water."

Commander Peary was asked if he believed the pole could be reached again and to what he ascribed his success.

"I believe." he said, "that any mem-ber of my party could reach the pole twice out of three times just the same twice out of three times just the same as Capt. Bartlett could take the Roose-veit through the ice floes to Cape Sheridan four out of five times. You get your training as you progress toward the pole. I keep myself sound. clean and straight, and this has been a great help in the trials of a rigorous climate. limate.

"The expedition this time was probably fortunate in the absence of winds east and west across our course and to the fortunate prevailing wind in our faces which held the ice to the land.

"Again, we had the advantage of a new type of sledges, without which we would not have been able to make our remarkable progress. This type our remarkable progress. This type of sledge, the Morris K. Jessup sledge, shows marked development. It re-duces the traction force on the dogs and duces the traction force on the dugarant also reduces the strain on the drivers. It is no picule in the arctic; just hard work all the time. There is no riding on the sledges, but just pushing every minute."

Prof. McMillan telling of finding relics and stores of earlier expeditions, said he came upon some supplies at Fort Conger which had been left there by the Greely expedition in 1881-84.

"There were coffee, tea, canned potatoes and rhubarb, and I tried them all," he said. "It seemed strange to think that 17 out of that party of 25 bed died of starygion after they had think that 17 out of that party of 25 had died of starvation after they had left these provisions behind. They had to go back under orders and failed to find the relief ship at Cape Sabine.

"I also found a trunk of Col. David Brainard and a scientific book belonging to Lieut. Frederick Kislingbury from his son, Hardy Kislingbury. There was also a temperature book inscribed "To Lieut. Kislingbury from his old friend and well wisher. George W. Clarke, Detroit, Mich." There were also uniforms of Gen. Greely, which I wore and a book in which George W. Rice, photographer of the party, had wore and a book in which George W. Rice, photographer of the party, had placed some plates. Nearby was a sheet of paper on which were some notes addressed to the chairman of some banquet which had been held by the party in the arctic. There were other relies, such as watch charms, musical instruments and stick pins.

"Near Etah I came upon the old Polaris house in Thank God harbor, which had been used by the expedition of Col. Dr. Hall in 1872. I found at latitude $1.44 a cuff on which was still written plainly the name of Sir John Lockwood. While at Kakan, I walked into an Eskimo but and found the Eskimos eating off a paste on the back of which was the name of the ship Gjos, which carried the Amundsen expedition in 1903-06. I gave the Eskimos a cup for themselves."

Prof. McMillan said that he came on the old headquarters of the expedition of Admiral Sir George Nares near Cape Sheridan.

Sheridan. "Why was it that you and the others why was it that you and the others did not go to the pole with Commander Peary Instead of Heuson?" McMillan was asked.

"Hecause Henson was better fitted," he replied. "He was stronger and had more experience, was a better sledge driver and repairer and in every way was the man to go."

ONE OF PEARY PARTY KNEW OF COOK'S STORY

Battle Harbor, Labrador, Sept. 19,—(By Marconi Wireless via Cape Ray, Sept. 19).—At least one man on the Roosevelt knew long ago that Fredcrick A Cook had reported having reached the pole. He is William Pritchard, assistant cook on the Roosevelt, who remained at Annatook to guard the stores.

Pritchard declared that he has not guard the stores.

Pritchard declared that he has not spoken to any one on board of Dr. Cook's achievement, but when confronted yesterday with a wireless message from mid-ocean that Dr. Cook said Pritchard knew the whole story of his dash for the pole, the youth admitted that he had learned from Dr. Cook details of the final march and that Dr. Cook had explained to him the route followed.

route followed.

Whether Boatswain Murphy also was informed of Cook's success, Pritchard did not know, but unquestionably Harry Whitney, who was at the storehouse when Dr. Cook returned, is conversant with all the facts. Whitney did not disclose this interesting plece of news to Commander Peary and Pritchard kept it from Peary on the entire voyage of the Roosevelt to Battle Harbor.

Pritchard said that he was at the Pritchard said that he was at the house at Annatook with Whitney and Cook while Murphy was at Etah. He heard Dr. Cook describe to the New Haven sportsman how he went to the pole and remained there two days. Asked why he had not repeated this on board the Roosevelt, Pritchard said that Dr. Cook had asked him to say nothing about it until the Roosevelt reached civilization.
